I am opposed to this legislation at this time. Until electric cars become affordable, under $30,000, and have similar ranges as gasoline powered vehicles, and in cold New England weather, the State of Maine has no business in supporting such a law. It is foolish to think you can legislate such a thing in my opinion and you have much bigger things to consider. Consider how difficult it is for the Maine auto dealers to sell electric automobiles to most of Maine's car buying public. Most people here are not interested in this technology. The reasons why can be found by a ten-minute search on the internet on what is wrong with electric autos. And, the air pollution in Maine comes from states west of Maine, and not locally. That might be a difficult subject for you to investigate and attempt to correct, but it would be doing something helpful for Maine residents.

Sincerely,

Anthony Kilburn
