I don't support mandating the sales of electric vehicles in Maine.

I do not think our government should be involved in mandating what people can and cannot buy. I think the free market should determine that, and give Maine citizens the ability to choose.

If electric vehicles are the better option and will meet our needs better than gas then they will be flying off the car lots, but if they are not a worthwhile investment, or if our power grid will not support them then we should not be forced to buy them.

Car dealers should not be forced to sell a product that is not wanted.

I am a self employed carpenter and my business depends on the reliability of my truck, the horsepower to pull equipment trailers, and the ability to fuel up and keep going when I need throughout the week.
