I do not believe we need to adopt any California type standards. Reasons being the passed on cost from the manufacturers will prohibitive for most in Maine to afford.

As far as EV's, in one of the coldest states during winter, electric vehicles are useless. Maine is too rural for the EV's to be viable transportation due to the extreme low range they offer and the almost zero existence of charging stations. Maines population does not warrant adopting any standard from a state like California whose population is much larger.

It's ridiculous to even consider this. Thank you for your time.
