It doesn't take a genius to figure out that California and Maine have very different climates, the major factor in determining if EV's make sense. It's funny that this vote was delayed due to issues with our sensitive electric grid even before all these electric vehicles are trying to charge every day. For this climate, I would think hybrid vehicles are the way to go until something better comes down the road. Electric in town where most of the pollution is but still allows you to use it on fuel when needed.

The other side of this crazy coin is the real reason for pushing EV's, control. Democrats love control. Follow the rules we make up, get your jobs, invite illegals into your home or your car won't be going anywhere. Prove me wrong.
