I pray that this entire proposal is scrapped!! Does anyone seriously think we will be able to power up all of these vehicles? California, that continuously has trouble powering their own residential needs , and where residents are forced into darkness because of the blackouts imposed on them because there is not enough power to support their everyday usage - and they now want to force everyone to follow their ill advised leadership? You cannot force a nation to place all of its rely solely on electric power for vehicles when such a huge majority want nothing to do with it! Here in Maine, with our long winters, where one may have to travel 8 or more hours to get from one end of the state to the other- really??? You think that we have time to wait around for hours while a vehicle is charging up so that we can continue on our travels?? And we haven't even addressed the issue of long haul trucks! Electric vehicle mandates are not feasible and not realistic. We cannot be forced to invest in something on such a large scale that we do not even have confidence in!
