No. If these lawmakers want to live in California they should by all means relocate there but stop trying to make Maine like California.

What happens when the power is out for a week or 2 after a big winter nor'easter and nobody can charge their vehicle? Or drive anywhere? Where is the infrastructure for this? Maine is a very cold severe winter state IT IS NOTHING LIKE CALIFORNIA.

EV just do not have the power or fortitude to go the distance that Mainers require.

What happens when someone freezes to death in their dead battery EV?

This is just not a sustainable method of transportation here in Maine. The cost of this technology and upkeep is more than we can bear.

Enough is enough.

Sincerely,
Paul J Miner
