INDUSTRY NEWS

FIGHT UNFAIR
AUTOMOTIVE LAWS

In a significant development for automotive enthusiasts and advocates of consumer choice, both West Virginia and Virginia have introduced legislation supportive of internal combustion engines (ICEs).

West Virginia's bill champions the ongoing use of ICE vehicles, underscoring the state's commitment to maintaining automotive diversity and respecting the preferences of its residents. This legislation is a clear nod to the importance of traditional automotive technology in the current market and a step towards protecting consumer choice.

Simultaneously, Virginia is making a move to repeal its previous ban on ICE vehicles. This effort reflects a growing recognition of the need to balance environmental initiatives with the rights of consumers to select vehicles that align with their needs and lifestyles. The Virginia bills represent a shift towards a more balanced approach, ensuring that decisions about vehicle technology remain in the hands of consumers like you.

Together, these legislative moves in West Virginia and Virginia signify a strong regional support for the continued availability of ICE vehicles, aligning with a broader national trend favoring automotive choice and a diverse range of technologies in the market. We encourage you to contact your lawmakers to show your support for both bills.
